Fabric Types and Attributes

This is a list of the major types of fabrics that we employ within our uniform and apparel range. Each of these fabrics have been developed and tested specifically for the sports and apparel they are used on. We feel that the combination of weight, durability, breathability and look represents the best application of the fabrics within our line. We have provided a chart that lists primary features as well as notes regarding the primary performance benefits associated with each fabric.

RATING SCALE

0 - Poor Performance of this characteristic

10 - Excellent Performance of this characteristic

SPANDEX FABRICS

Spandex (Lycra, Elastane) is a synthetic fibre known for its exceptional elasticity, fast drying and shape retention properties. As little as 2% Spandex blended into fabrics provides some degree of comfort and stretch. Our spandex 4-way stretch fabrics feature as much as 15% spandex blended with a smooth polyester to provide the ultimate in comfort, stretch, breathability, durability, and shape retention. We offer a heavyweight spandex that is used in contact sports and single layer reversibles as well as a lighter weight high stretch compression spandex used in our compression base layer products as well as some volleyball and field hockey products. All of our Spandex fabrics are anti-microbial and moisture wicking.
